

Communicating in English: Academic Writing

During the spring term 2019 the Language Workshop will offer a course in academic writing in English for international students. The course will focus on the basics of writing in an academic context.

Course aims: This course aims to provide students with basic skills of academic writing, including audience awareness, how to structure a text, and how to use secondary sources. Another important aim of the course is to make visible the often implicit and opaque rules and expectations of academic culture, including academic integrity and critical thinking.

At the end of the course, students should be familiar with the characteristics of academic English and be able to produce a text in an independent and academically accepted manner. Students should also be able to provide feedback on fellow students' texts in a lucid and constructive manner, as well as incorporate received feedback when revising their own texts. In addition, students should demonstrate critical thinking skills and be able to handle secondary sources in an academically accepted manner.

Target group: This course is primarily intended for international master students who are so-called free movers, and for international PhD students. Students must be registered at Uppsala University in order to take the course. Exchange students may apply for the course but will be placed on a waiting list, and offered a place on the course if there are vacancies at the end of the registration period.

There are no language prerequisites (apart from those necessary to be admitted to the university).

Course literature: articles

Examination: Each student who fulfills the course requirements will receive a certificate. Please note that no academic credits will be given for this course.

Course format: This course consists of 7 meetings (1/every week or every other week (see schedule), in the evening, 90 mins). Attendance is mandatory and students must inform the teacher of any absence in advance. Students who miss more than two meetings will not be able to complete the course.

The first meeting will be on Tuesday, Feb. 5 at 6:15 p.m. (please see attached schedule).

The focus throughout the course will be on practical uses of English and students will be given practical advice on how to improve their English skills.
